Crisis communication has become a much needed skill for all line personnel in the 21st Century. Even when negotiators are required on-scene for hostage and barricaded subject calls, those at the scene who request their assistance can supply much needed information to aid their response prior to their arrival. This training is designed to provide first responders and new negotiators with the ability to safely and effectively intervene in a variety of crisis situations. It has been developed to improve the initial response capabilities of the first responder, as well as a new officer assigned to crisis negotiations, to better deal with a variety of related concerns common at the site of a critical incident.

TOPICS INCLUDE:

- ▶ Techniques useful to the First Responder to a crisis or hostage scene used to aid Negotiators and SWAT.
- ▶ Proven techniques for concerns at critical incident scenes related to intervention, assessment & negotiation.
- ▶ Ethical, liability and community related issues that should be considered and addressed whenever crisis calls of the types reviewed are responded to.
- ▶ Various personalities associated with hostage takings, school violence, barricaded and suicidal incidents, and how to deal and negotiate with those involved.

Practical exercises and class assignments designed to enhance understanding and develop related skills will be employed throughout this training.

The instructor has been certified in crisis intervention techniques and has worked on cases that required the application of both negotiation and intervention skills during his career. He has developed customized training for Law Enforcement organizations on Crisis and Hostage Negotiation, Suicide Intervention and Crisis Intervention, and has also developed training on Domestic, School and Workplace violence intervention.
