U.S. society has had its own particular extremist groups almost from its founding. Law enforcement personnel have had to deal with extremists of all types, with beliefs running from racism, radical religious beliefs, and militant left and right-wing political activism. This training has been developed to acquaint law enforcement personnel with a variety of extremist causes and groups, its aim is to provide an awareness that can help an attendee tell the difference between the extremist who poses a potential threat and those who are nonviolent yet hold extreme beliefs. Potentially problematic and volatile groups will be examined and reviewed from an officer safety and awareness perspective.

TOPICS INCLUDE:

- ▶ A review of the belief systems of right and left wing, special interest, anarchist, and religious extremists, and how they could pose a threat to officers and the communities they serve.
- ▶ An examination of the mindset of fundamentalism, extremism, and terrorism.
- ▶ An exploration of identifiers attributable to malevolent religious groups.
- ▶ Identifiers applicable to various extremist groups that law enforcement personnel could come into contact with.
- ▶ A review of case studies where confrontation and conflict has occurred.
- ▶ Common indicators of extremist beliefs relevant to community and officer safety concerns.
